Dr. David Dagg-Murry PhD, LAc, LPCC-S, LICDC-CS

The American Institute of Alternative Medicine gave me an outstanding academic and clinical experience. I graduated in the first Master of Acupuncture cohort in 2019. My AIAM experience required extensive personal and professional growth. The faculty were exceptionally supportive during each step of my learning, whether it was western biomedicine courses, Traditional Chinese Medicine courses, or clinical work.

One of the richest experiences was studying abroad in China, interning at an integrated western/Traditional Chinese Medicine hospital. The teaching faculty were brilliant and gave hours of their time to help increase my learning and clinical practice. I was fortunate to work closely with a faculty member on publishing a research article during my internship in China. The clinical and cultural experience added so much depth to my work as an acupuncturist.

I currently own and operate a large private acupuncture practice, Fairfield Acupuncture, near Lancaster, Ohio. I have full-time staff and have recently secured new space because of our growth, and the community need for acupuncture. Fairfield Acupuncture specializes in chronic conditions—chronic pain, chronic fatigue, and emotional health.

AIAM provided a strong foundation for my clinical practice. The staff and faculty always encouraged learning and growth.
